

Digital and Information Literacy: Set 4

Literacy is no longer simply the ability to read and interpret information. With the arrival of the Information Age, the Internet, and personal and mobile computing devices, young people are now inundated daily with information from many sources and they are expected to be savvy at processing this information. Evolving with the changing times, literacy now involves a range of specialized skills; students must be visually literate, digitally literate, and technologically literate. Students must also learn how to apply ethical standards to the process respecting the intellectual content, personal feelings, and safety of all members of the cyber-community, including their own. This exceptional series provides readers with a thorough grounding in the fundamentals of digital information gathering, content generating, social networking, and cyber-ethics (in academic, professional, and personal contexts). Featured subjects include Gaming, Google, Wikipedia, Blogs, Twitter and microblogging, and Foursquare and other location-based services. Each book is written in an engaging, helpful tone and is supported by sidebars and a full resource section for further exploration.
