

Washington State Magazine :: Fall 2013

In this issue of Washington State Magazine:-----Features-----Water to the Promised Land :: As an aquifer declines, Columbia Basin farmers look to water promised them 80 years ago. by Tim SteuryBooze, Sex, and Reality Check :: Student drinking may always be with us, but behavior modification could make it less risky. by Hannelore SudermannIf You Dont Snooze, You Lose :: Chances are, you do not get enough sleep. And that could be dangerous. by Eric Sorensen-----Panoramas - Short articles on research, outreach and alumni of Washington State University-----:: The tractor beam has arrived:: Stronger may not be better:: A fitting business:: An even playing field:: From Holland Library to hacking history:: Dynamic duo:: Apple-a-Day:: A Cougar trade show-----Departments-----:: First Words:: Posts:: Short subject: Constant coffee:: Sports: Composing Cougar soccer:: Sports: Cougar Crew Days :: National champs:: In Season: Washingtons sweet corn secret:: Last Words: A small discovery-----Tracking-----:: Kathleen McChesney 71Agent of change:: Jennifer Merschdorf 96A young survivor:: Eugene Rosa 1942-2013Working for people and the planet:: Charles Argersinger 1951-2013Equilibrium:: Alumni News: Ten years of teamwork-----New Media-----Oceania and the Victorian Imagination: Where All Things Are Possible edited by Richard D. Fulton 75 PhD and Peter H. HoffenbergLove Reports to Spring Training by Linda KittellRugged Mercy: A Country Doctor in Idahos Sun Valley by Robert S. WrightNew & Noteworthy: Luna Sea by Kim Roberts 82; The Boys From Ireland: An Irish Immigrant Familys Involvement in the Civil War by Neil W. Moloney 53; Biodesign Out for a Walk by Lowell Harrison Young 72; Characterization of

Cougar mens crew has competed in rowing for 40 years and alumni and current rowers celebrated last spring. The WSU womens rugby squad won a second Washington State Magazine covers news and issues of interest to Washington Fall 2014. WSU professor Matt Carroll, whose academic specialty is human How Washington Tastes The Apple meets Cougar Gold :: One need not be an expert taster to appreciate the chemistry between the apple and Cougar Gold. by Washington State Magazine covers news and issues of interest to Washington State :: Irrigation on the Columbia Basin Photographs by Zach Mazur Fall 2013. Washington State Magazine covers news and issues of interest to First Words for Fall 2014. Fall 2014. Subtle ties between stories are revealed in the issue, Washington State Universitys sculpture The Reader made its first appearance on campus in 1949. The Powwow, the colleges alumni magazine, carried the States. With irrigation, corn fits in nicely with the crop rotation in central Washington. Washington State Magazine. Fall 2013. Print :: Return to web page Washington State Magazine covers news and issues of interest to Washington Fall 2014. Letters from WSU alumni cover Ferdinands murals and past articles. Ralph Barclay stumbled across a technical journal in Holland Library in 1960 that led him Washington State Magazine. Fall 2013. Print :: Return to web page WSU womens soccer coach Keidane McAlpine was a music business graduate and brings an up-tempo game to Cougar soccer. Features. Water to the Promised Land :: As an aquifer declines, Columbia Basin farmers look to water promised them 80 years ago. by Tim Steury. The story behind the sign. Many signs display Cougar pride on the way to Pullman, but only one stands 27 feet high and 400 feet long. The GoArtist Jim Dine gave WSU The Technicolor Heart in 2004. Now he has given a significant collection of more than 200 of his prints to the University. Water to the Promised Land :: As an aquifer declines, Columbia Basin farmers look to water Washington State Magazine. Fall 2013. Print :: Return to web page Lucy Stevenson opened her hat and dressmaking business in the late nineteenth century at the age of 60. Her work and life was exhibited at WSU in spring